Artist statement guidelines

Guidelines for writing an artist statement.

Things that should not include in a statement of artist include: information about your career of artist History of exposure History of the work if necessary, these topics should be included separately in a further biography or CV. What are the themes, ideas and worries that your work considers individually? Are there any particular theories, artists or schools of thought relevant to your work? This is your art, not of you. Do not use a complex or specialist language unnecessarily. There is a "intention" behind work; What do you want the job to reach? What is it? So what kind of information would you include in a statement of an artist? The purpose of the affirmation of the artist is to speak in a targeted way of your practice, no more extensive questions or philosophical concepts. What interests you about this type of work? Accuracy: Don't make your job look like something. Is there a relationship between the media and the ideas with which you work? In addition to providing appropriate information in a statement of artists, the way it is delivered is important. What processes are involved in work and how are they relevant to the ideas you have to do? The purpose of the declaration is to clarify and improve our understanding. It should be written firsthand and be of 50 to 150 words at most. You will need a statement of the artist for most opportunities, to add to press releases, websites and when closing galleries and curators. Here are some questions you might consider: with which media worked? What processes and techniques used? They are various and different as the art they claim, so the following suggestions are to be understood as guidelines and observations rather than like rigid and fast rules. Types of statements You and your body of work General overview, approach, style, themes, media You and a Work Ideas, themes, media on an exhibition You and a particular work Specific idea, theme, media Write an artist's statement Step 1 Take five minutes and think about why you do what you do Why do you like to make art? What are your goals and aspirations as an artist? Stick to your argument, which is your practice. Writing them in the third person (Jane's work A IeA) is less direct than in the first person (My work A IeA) An Artist Statement is a short statement about art. What binds your individual works together in a studio? Are there outside influences and ideas, perhaps outside the arts, that have influenced your work? A statement should give the reader a better understanding of where your practice and interests come from, influences you or your work, and help them interpret what you do. Who or what inspires you? Explain the decisions you made about how the work took shape and why you made them. Say what you see: it can be helpful to refer to all the physical qualities of your work in reference to the conceptual ones. A longer statement can go into more details about specific works. An artist's statement is a short piece about your work, your practice, and any other broader intellectual preoccupation. The following qualities make a good statement by the artist Be clear: use simple English as much as possible, unless you are dealing with specific concepts, and explain them briefly. Make a list of words and phrases Write five sentences that tell the truth about your connection to your work Step 2 Write an artist's statement in three paragraphs First paragraph: Who you are What interests you Why do you do the work you do Second paragraph: Favorite medium, technical issues Third paragraph: What you are exploring, trying, challenging with your work nu nu erartsomid ehcn ebbervod enoizarahcid al ,oroval la ilapicnirp oiccorppa out li e aedi aut al erageipis a style survey; What the work for the artist and the personal experience of him means. This could be a direct paragraph of about 100 to 200 words in length which can then be adapted and added according to what is presented for. The length depends on how it is used. Try to be goal or at least uses an objective language when describing your work. Objectivity: the use of superlatives and great statements when describing your work will not be favors. Artist's statements act as introduction to your practice as a whole, highlighting concerns, motivations and common processes that take place throughout. An accurate statement on good work that deals with a relatively simple idea is much better than trying to make something intelligent appear to be dressed in hyperbole. Writing an artist's statement will also help you focus and order your thoughts about your practice. It's a good idea to have a statement by basic artists that you can adapt, grow or narrow as you need for different things, to provide a quick starting point for applications. What do you prefer you / themes? Why do you work on these media? A on the current direction of your work, not a story of how you arrived at this point an explanation of your style, approach, philosophy, subject and / or theme a statement of your intentions through your work a touching testament to your creativity and Integrity can be for a particular work of art, a particular work show or a total statement on your work body in general. General.
